The Editor's Sanctum

We are once more in the midst of elections, and too much serious thought cannot be given by you for the selection of the man you want in office for the ensuing year. Your vote may have a potential power of only one in your eyes, but it may very probably decide the choice of a candidate. Therefore give as much thought to your second and third choice as your first.

There are three or more vital questions we should ask ourselves before going to the polls. What is the academic standing of the candidate? Has he the time to devote to the office he aspires to? Is he willing to serve unselfishly? The first is easily determined, and of course has a bearing on the second, for any office requires time that should be devoted to study or lectures. By the second, I mean, is the candidate's time taken up with athletic work, club, fraternity or outside pursuits? And last, is the candidate willing to serve unselfishly? Service for what one can get out of it for oneself is obviously not the kind we want, and it is up to you to prevent it. Men who have served unselfishly in small things in the time past, that could not possibly bring them any glory, should be given precedence over the man who springs to life near elections, and then smiles and shakes your hand.

All these points are quite obvious, yet are often overlooked when marking your ballot, and they mean the success or failure of your society. So if we have regard to these points collectively, and the personality of the man running for office, the success of our election is assured.
